spondylotic myelopathy (CSM) is rare, and less than 40 cases have been reported so far \[@B2]\]. We report a case of MPS caused by CSM. Case Report {#sec1_2} ===== A 56-year-old woman with a past history of cervical myelopathy presented to the hospital with a 10-month history of gradually progressive symptoms, such as left arm pain, gradually increasing neck pain and shoulder pain. She had a history of osteoarthritis of her left knee. Upon examination, she showed left arm weakness, especially of the left hand and arm, with 4/5 strength. Motor examination revealed a left upper limb lateral rotation sign. A neuropathic and painful deficit was observed on the left side of the upper trunk. Spurling's test was positive. Although her cervical alignment was maintained and her position was well maintained on the cervical spine lateral radiographs, magnetic resonance imaging revealed a disc herniation at the level of C5-C6 on the left side and spondylosis at the level of C3-C4 on the left side. In addition, spinal canal stenosis at the level of C4-C5 on the left side was also observed. The cause of the myelopathy was judged to be stenosis of the spinal canal and sub-ligamentous disc herniation. 2d92ce491b
