The fire occurred at a house in the centre of the city on January 31. Michael Doherty (18) was charged with four counts of arson. He appeared before the Belfast Magistrates' Court and was remanded in custody to appear again at the High Court on July 13. A man and a woman were in a house on the Crumlin Road when a fire broke out. They escaped with only minor injuries. It is understood the police were first made aware of the fire at 1am on January 31. Later in the day, a fire broke out at a house on the Park Avenue. The occupant escaped unhurt. The final fire at a house on the Lower Ormeau Road occurred on April 19. The occupants of the house were not home at the time.This copy is for your personal non-commercial use only. But the key issue of Bill C-14 is how to respond to the brain injury crisis, a problem that is expected to cripple the country for decades and take the lives of 40,000 Canadians annually. "The minister for health cares for all Canadians, especially those who are most vulnerable," said Justice Minister Peter MacKay at a news conference, the first public comment on the legislation. "We're going to continue to work with her team, with all Canadians, to ensure that our health care system is the best it can be." The Conservative government's initial idea was to repeal the Canada Health Act, which sets out how the provinces must operate their health care systems. The NDP said the government's plan amounts to a "mockery of democracy" and should be sent to the waste basket. "The Liberals, the Conservatives,
