He can only add comments to a single employee at a time. So if he adds one of the employees as a comment, and then tries to add a different employee, the second request is ignored. My question is, what is the best way to determine if the request is from a different employee than the last? (there will be an id auto incrementing for each request) I could have a field in the table called LastID, but the ID will never change. And I can't get the LastID out of the request when I do the query. Thanks! A: If you are using InnoDB tables, you can use FOR UPDATE and an anti-join pattern. The query: `SELECT c1.* FROM table1 c1 LEFT JOIN table1 c2 ON c1.id = c2.id WHERE 2d92ce491b`
