

Since Windows Animated Gif Player ActiveX can be embedded in any kind of application that uses ActiveX Controls, it can be used wherever there is a need for an animated GIF, from simple Internet Explorer based web pages to desktop applications with embedded GIF support. Once installed, the control appears in the ActiveX Controls window as GIF Player. The control can be used to play animations, specify the number of times the animation should be played, start it in a loop or a specified amount of time, and specify the width and height for the player control, among other functions. Features of Windows Animated Gif Player Allows animated GIF to be played Controls number of times the animation should be played Specify the width and height for the player control Controls the orientation of the animation Support for registering to receive notification when the animation ends Controls the behavior of the animation when it ends Unload Animation file when the animation is complete Supports Windows Media, WMV and MPEG Files Work Offline with Windows Animated Gif Player ActiveX How to use Windows Animated Gif Player ActiveX As it is an ActiveX Control, you first need to install the ActiveX control on your Windows XP, Windows 2000 or Windows NT Server PC from the Windows XP CD or Windows 2000 DVD. If you do not already have a copy of the Windows XP CD or Windows 2000 DVD in your computer, you can find them in your local software store. After installing the ActiveX control, you can go to Windows XP Control Panel and then choose Add/Remove Programs to install the control. The Animated Gif Player Control can be used by creating a Control Object, which is a representation of an ActiveX control, and then using it to build your form. Creating a Control Object You can easily create a Control Object to use the Windows Animated Gif Player ActiveX Control in any application. To create a control object to embed in your application, right-click on the control in the Controls window of the Windows XP Control Panel and choose Create Object from the context menu. You can then choose what kind of object you want to create. You can create a button object, a menu control object, a frame, an item or a list box control object. The List Box control can be used to create a custom drop down menu for the 70238732e0
