NASHVILLE, Tenn. (WTVF) — A Tennessee couple got quite the shock when they saw an unexpected new arrival in their backyard. Kristin and Sean Smith were taking their dog for a walk when their dog let out a scream. They followed her to the backyard, where they saw a 10-foot snake in their pond. "We have had an 8-foot rattlesnake and everything else," Kristin Smith said. "So we've seen all of them." But the Smiths were not prepared for a new species. "We're from Michigan, and we never saw anything like that, that long," Kristin Smith said. "It was frightening." When they tried to use an umbrella to grab the snake, it moved, causing the Smiths to back away. The snake didn't budge, and Kristin Smith started recording the encounter on her phone. "I was trying to get the snake out, and I was trying to get the snake out as much as I could," she said. "But it was so thick and still." The Smiths say they realized the snake is a Burmese Python. They estimate that the snake is around 20 years old and was most likely kept as a pet by a previous owner. But this snake didn't belong in their pond. "He's gotten out and is living here in the pond, and we don't even have the fencing around the pond," Kristin Smith said. So instead of trying to get the snake out, Kristin and Sean Smith took the snake's owner to court. The Smiths say they believe a neighbor must have recently been feeding the snake. They now hope the snake is caught and removed. "Hopefully the snake can be safely removed," Kristin Smith said. "So we can be happy that the snake is safe and so we can go back to our life."`function getter(name) { return object[name]; } function setter(name, value) { object[name] = value; } var object = {}; object.getA = get 2d92ce491b`
