In the Digital Domain Digest series of articles we've made a stunning impression on the users of HP EVO-Chromebooks by offering so many options to customise and personalise the device, anyone can give their own personality to the digital tool they use every day. Today we're introducing you to the HP EVO-Chromebooks Multimedia Tabs. What are Tabs? A Tab on Chrome is an area, which appears at the top of the page or as a popup when you click on the icon from the Bookmarks bar (as well as when you press CTRL + T). The best example is the email.com example from the picture above. It's a link to the website address where you can send and receive messages via email. This is what the Tab on the HP EVO-Chromebooks will do for you. Hearing the word Tab might make you think of the world-renowned Tabs Studio by Google, which Chrome has integrated into its browser. Tabs Studio is an application that allows you to create your own tabs on Google.com by adding pictures, text and multimedia content. It's a great tool that enables you to personalise the web like you're on Pinterest. Tabs Studio works in the same way on every Google device, but it is not available to download on the HP EVO-Chromebooks. At this point I'm sure you are thinking that we could have a tool that works just like Tabs Studio. But that doesn't mean that this application won't improve your experience on the HP EVO-Chromebooks. For instance, we have used the word Tab to describe this innovative application. I'm sure you have a favourite Tabs Studio tab that you can get your mind off of while you are working and create a
