A while ago, I bought a set of three ATCs and started looking at dyes for them. I looked at Dioxazine, Fulvanite and Timbo colours. For a change, I decided to make up a test piece in the lightfastest/fastest pens I had, with a set of Dioxazines and a Timbo (faded green). I started with one Timbo and a tube of Timbo dots. The Timbo gives a nice red-gold finished piece, but the dots require a bit of concentration and change significantly if they are more than 20 mm away from the tip (i.e. cutting a 20 mm wide section of Timbo dot from a tube and putting it on an ATC would only give you about six dots). I used a mix of Dioxazine and DT-XL-F for the Timbo dot (about 3/4 each) and settled on a mix of Timbo and Dawn Ultra for the ATC (about 1/2 each). I had quite a bit of mix left over, so I used it for some spare Timbo dots, along with some fulvanites. I also tried a Fulvanite/Dioxazine mix on a very large size ATC, so I'm now pretty happy with what I can do with Timbo dots. The Dioxazine/DT-XL-F is an interesting combination. It is quite a fast-drying pen, but it doesn't change colour all that much (with exception of the Timbo dot). The new mixture changes quite a bit (full red to yellow to brown/orange) and dries quite quickly and has a gritty finish. I think you would like it if you like a gritty finish. I'm afraid I can't give a final opinion as I don't have the Timbo dye but it was interesting. The dyes produced very rich yellow-gold hues on all three designs. It's not easy to see the very fine dot lines on the ATC, but when you take a look at the Timbo you can still see the dots
