Wisdom Part 1: You can't do the right thing all the time. It's so simple to get out of bed in the morning and make every decision in life based on what we think will help us feel better. It's so easy to set up automated routines to protect ourselves and not overthink decisions, because we think we're too busy and too important to put in the work to make sure we're on the right side of morality. But life doesn't have any guarantees. You can never be positive enough that you're doing the right thing, and you can never be sure you've done the best thing. To set yourself up for success, you need to take morality off the shelf and figure out what's the right thing to do at every single point in life. This is not something you can do well. This is not something you can aspire to. It is basic knowledge of what we believe to be true. It is logic. It is figuring out what you would say to a friend who can't decide between two paths, and then figuring out which path is most important. It is answering questions like these from your 9-year-old self: If someone does something wrong, how should you react? If you don't care about someone, what is the right thing
