All eight on-field camera angles can be used in one game, and players can be viewed, tackled, and dribbled on screen from multiple angles. A new all-new camera angle allows players to directly control the ball when they are on the ball. Players have access to the right-stick to shoot or pass when on the ball. This new direction, switching based on the player's sprint, creates an additional new dynamic to the gameplay. Players are being rendered in 2K resolution (or 4K on Xbox One X), with an additional 1080p resolution for matchday broadcasts and licensed club sponsorships. Matchday broadcasts will also feature post-processing filters to improve player rendering quality and the visual fidelity of the game. FIFA is an annual, international football video game series published and developed by EA Sports. The franchise had its roots in Electronic Arts' Need for Speed series, a racing game series developed by EA Black Box. In an effort to further expand upon the Need for Speed series, EA sold the Need for Speed brand and all related intellectual property to Swedish publisher Ghost Games in September 2007. The first game in the series, Need for Speed: Most Wanted, was released for Microsoft Windows in November 2002. The Need for Speed series takes place across both fictional and real-world locations, including both single-player and multiplayer modes. In single-player modes, users can become a driver and drive across different courses in a variety of vehicles, or a cop. A series of unlockable characters can be selected, each with their own strengths and weaknesses. The game is often described as "cars, cops, and civilians" due to the inclusion of the aforementioned characters in the game's driving and law enforcement simulations. Multiplayer modes allow players to compete against other human opponents online. The FIFA series, which debuted as a sports game for the Sony PlayStation on October 10, 1994, focuses on team-based play in a football setting, which is described as either international, international friendly, or club football. The FIFA series is often described as football sim, and is considered by many the best football game series ever made. What is the year in which FIFA is taking place? FIFA is set in North America, Europe, South America, and Asia (which includes Africa). If you are trying to understand why there is a drought in the Americas or why Ronaldo doesn't score as many goals in North America as he does in the rest of the world, it's because North America and South America are shown separately. South America includes the following: Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela. North America includes the following: Canada, Cuba, Mexico, United States of America Who are the teams in FIFA? In FIFA, you can play as the following 17 major national football teams, 16 in Single Player Mode. Here are the full team list, their team name in the English league, and the corresponding FIFA team name in brackets: Canada (Canada) Australia (Australia) Argentina (Argentina) Bolivia (Bolivia) Brazil (Brazil) Chile (Chile) Colombia (Colombia) Ecuador (Ecuador) Egypt (Egypt)
