A friend told me she had a story to tell, and I listened intently. Her first marriage was ending — she had been a high-powered executive in a high-flying company, and her husband had not been a very good father. They were now divorcing, and I told her that she had to remember how good that man had been to her, to her children, and to her whole family. Her tears flowed. "But that man is dead," she insisted. "You're the only person I've told this to. Can't you write this story? He's dead, but I can still feel him. I can still feel the love he used to give me. It's gone now, but I can still feel it." Her good husband was dead, and his good parenting was gone, but the broken trust, the shattered relationships — those memories remained. She had paid a high price for her failed marriage. Her children loved their father. "But I feel his love." I spent a great deal of my own life doing some pretty decent parenting. I often felt the pain of my children's hurts, and I worried over them, too. It never occurred to me that there were times when I was blameless — times when my children were angry at me because I had done nothing to them. I did a lot of good, and I did a lot of harm; I hurt my children because I was a child myself, at times. I taught my children that it was their duty to love and honor their parents. I was no longer a parent but I was still the one who had taught them, and who had served as their example. God has always been good to me. But it never occurred to me that the Lord's faithfulness should somehow take away some of my pain, or cover over my mistakes. I felt guilty as often as I felt His presence. I do not think I would have ever known how to cope with my own guilt or my own pain if I had not served as a mother and a father. I did my best for my children, and they turned out all right; I did my best for my own children, but I did not live up to the best that I could have been. I did my best to teach my children how to be good, and to show them how to love. But I had no

The work proposed in this grant application is designed to investigate the structure-function relationships in the two sites, the microtubule-associated and nucleoplasmic, of nuclear RNA polymerase II. The specific aims are: 1) to investigate the interaction of RNA polymerase II with isolated microtubules; 2) to measure transcriptional ability of RNA polymerase II in vitro in the presence of purified microtubules; 3) to determine if the response to microtubules of RNA polymerase II is altered by the addition of various transcription factors; and 4) to determine if there is a microtubule-associated nucleoplasmic motor activity in RNA polymerase II.Q: Finance topic goes away? I know that financial institution is a whole different topic in itself, but I'm not sure if this is the best place for it. I've been editing on Mathematics and Mechanics for some time now but the Finance topic has gone. I just saw the word "chicken" in the logs. Why was this topic removed? A: In a sense, any question about finance belongs here. But the Finance topic is closed, as you saw (it has a warning after all): This question doesn't appear to be about mathematics within the scope defined in the help center. Actually, the topic link you are talking about seems to be dead, too: This link is not working due to maintenance work. Please try again later. So, the answer is, I don't know why it got deleted. Maybe it was deleted by a moderator, maybe a user deleted it. I can't answer for sure. Q: Number of collinearities in a digital image Hello everyone I am currently trying to compute the number of collinearities that I can find in an image, each collinearity is a collinearity of the form (0,0) with a position but it's not the only one, I should compute the maximum number of collinearities within a quarter of a plane. To do this I create a list which contains as key the value of the plane the collinearity represents and as value the number of related collinearities and I loop through this list to compute the maximum value and then I generate a random array that I use to generate a quarter of a plane. Now I would like to filter my list by leaving the collin
